Transportation Safety Board spokesman in Anchorage, said a series of explosions "followed an attempted abort" as the fuel-laden aircraft strained to become airborne. An NTSB team arrived here from Washington yesterday to begin an investigation.

Witnesses said the plane slithered over the slippery runway, up a small mound and across a depression in the earth, cracking into pieces as it came to rest nearly three-quarters of a mile from the runway's end.

Survivors and witnesses described a variety of small explosions they said occurred as the plane's nose lifted, then turned downward. At least two explosions of larger size erupted a few minutes after the stricken plane skidded to a stop, one witness said.

Nixon Sends Letter

WICHITA, Kan., Nov. 29 (AP),-Technical trouble delayed the start of the "Night of Stars" benefit show last night, but the capacity crowd cheered the parade of entertainers who donated their talents.

The show, telecast live or from tape by more than 200 stations in 49 states, was staged to raise funds for survivors of the two tragic airplane crashes that killed football players and coaches of Wichita State University and Marshall University of Huntington, W.Va.

Woody Hayes, Ohio State University coach, appeared as the repre sentative of President Nixon and 'Mrs. Nixon and I join in spirit with those who are participating in the Night of Stars benefit. The Nixon family fully shares the wide-spread concern for those who grieve the loss of their loved ones. It gratifying to us that so many of you have come to their assistance at this difficult time. We send our best wishes for the complete success of this heart-warming rasponse to their needs."

Monty Hall, the master of care monies, told the audience that one of the aims of this benefit is to need your help."

The Two Big Plays Called by Nixon Against North Vietnar

THAILAYS

By Max Frankel

WASHINGTON (NYT) -Except for the ontcome, it was as American as John Wayne. President Nixon preferred the metaphor of football, meaning that when you're in trouble you aim for surprise; players call it going for the long one, throwing the bomb.

Last week, Mr. Nixon was revealed to have called two big plays against the North Vietnamese. One was an end run around all the diplomacy and propaganda to obtain the release of American prisoners—a spec-tacular landing near the enemy capital. The other was a frontal assault by air—a temporary but massive resumption of the bomb-ing of enemy territory. The Washington to Paris, as legislators, newsmen and an engrossed public in many lands strained to learn what actually happened, why and what it all means for the larger term in the already overlong Vietnam war.

Prisoners

After months of rehearsal in a stage-set replica of their objective on the Florida Gulf Coast and weeks of waiting for the Vietnam monsoons to depart and for the moon to hang just right over Hanoi, the men of Joint Contingency Task Group Ivory Coast swirled into action last weekend. Navy fighter planes swarmed off their carrier decks in the Tonkin Gulf short-ly after midnight, spraying flares and perhaps more deadly ordnance all around the enemy capital to shock, confound and divert the region's defenders. Air Force fighters came in low over the actual target from another direction, bombing a military post to pin down its troops and softening up the landing area. And groping their way through the confusion and darkness all the way from Thailand came eight or 10 Air Force helicopters, some of them bearing the commando landing team of 50-odd Green Beret Army volunteers, some of them providing air oover and emergency support, and some of them waiting to receive as many of the 70 to 100 American prisoners who might be snatched from

The objective was a rectangular compound half the size of a football field, with seven buildings and a courtyard, surrounded by a stucco wall, beside a village river in the prov-ince of Son Tay, 23 miles northwest of Hanoi. It had been spotted and surveyed from the air telligence sources as one of the six or seven locations around the enemy capital in which the North Vietnamese have kept captured American pilots, some of them for more than five the enemy's grip.

Under fierce diplomatic and propaganda pressure, the North Vietnamese have grudgingly and indirectly acknowledged holding 339 prisoners, reported that they were being well treated and contended that their release could be discussed as soon as the United States has set a deadline for the withdrawal of all its forces from South Vietnam. In short, they were being held as hostages to a political

The Nixon administration, in turn, contended that Hanoi was holding at least 378 prisoners and perhaps many more. It claimed that they had been maltreated, sometimes starved and tortured to death, in gross vio-lation of international law and in brutal disregard of the feelings of their families, many of whom have lived for years without knowing whether missing airmen were dead or alive. The President offered to exchange all prisoners in the Vietnam war and pleaded repeatedly for news prisoner-of-war camp where, Defense Secretary Laird disclosed, a United States commando force landed in an unsuccessful attempt to free American captives. The commandos found the prisoners had been moved. Just how little was known about them in Washington became evident within minutes of the moment last weekend when Col. Arthur D. "Bull" Simons. the rugged 52-year-old Ranger veteran, crash-landed the lead helicopter inside the Son Tay compound, killed or drove away a few bewildered guards and led his men through a well-drilled search of the buildings.

For nearly an bour, they stormed through the compound's cells, breaking down doors and barriers with acetylene torches, saws and other tools, screaming shouts of rescue to the missing men. They took some hostile fire but suffered only one minor injury, they said.

But they found no American prisoners. They guessed, in the darkness that none had been there for at least a few weeks. "It was like hollering in an empty room," said one of the

Bombing

A few hours later, shortly af-ter dawn, a wholly different force of about 250 Navy and Air Force action in the southern part of North Vietnam, Flying in waves from South Vietnam, from carriers at sea and perhaps also from Thailand, they bombarded supply bases and warehouses, truck concentrations and air defense emplacements, mostly in the southwestern corner of the country—the head of the funnel through which enemy supplies and men are regularly moved into Laos and then down the so-called Ho Chi Minh jungle trail to South Vietnam. Some of the hombers also ranged as far north as the 19th parallel, 200 miles north of the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) that divides North and South Vietnam, the Pentagon said. They ranged even farther north, according to Hanol.

The bombings appear to have been authorized for a period of 24 hours, though most of the attacks were concentrated in seven or eight daylight hours. The effect of the raid is not known but had weather cut the contemplated number of strikes by half. It was the second time that President Nixon had turned loose American air power over a wide area of North Vletnam to stop the constant hombing of the North under a deliberately vague "understanding" with the enemy two years ago this month. At the time, in exchange for what Hanoi could publicly ad-vertise as an "unconditional" bombing halt, United States negotiators were assured by the North Vietnamese in Paris and by Soviet diplomats elsewhere that the enemy clearly understood his obligation to meet three American conditions: (1) The sanctity of the Demilitarized Zone;

(3) "Productive" discussions at the conference table—by which the Americans made it clear they meant the participation of the Saigon government, mortar attacks on Sonth Vietnamese civilian population

The North Vietnamese offered to assent in private to this understanding provided that all "acts of war" against their ter-ritory came to an end. The Americans held out, however, for a promise to end only "acts explaining that they intended to continue unarmed reconnaissance flights over North Viet-

In the years since then, Hanoi has repeatedly challenged the reconnaissance flights both with protests and with has reasserted its right to fly, eventually sending armed escorts to accompany the spy planes and claiming a right to bomb air defense installations that fired upon them—the so-called right of "protective reaction." Usually, snch retaliation meant a swift strike of four or five planes against an antiaircraft missile system or radar complex. But last May, shortly after President Nixon ordered a ground assault upon enemy supply bases in Cambodia, he also authorized a secret strike by at least-128 bombers against supply bases throughout the southern region of North Vietnam. When Hanoi protested, the Pentagon tried to pass this off as merely another retaliatory strike, and only enterprising reporters forced the admission that it had been a sighly expanded "protective reaction" raid, arising not so much from the loss of reconnaissance planes as from the pictures of supply buildups that they had brought back.

The real purpose, it turned out was to wipe out hage stocks of enemy material destined for South Vietnam and to warn Hanoi that American air power; could and would be used to help protect the Salgon forces even: as American ground troops were.

being withdrawn from the war. Hanoi News First

In the case of the latest forays, it was once again Hanol that first released the news. Its radio portrayed the two actions -the commando action and the bombings—as a single opera-tion. It made no mention of the commandos but said a prisoner-of-war camp had been among the facilities hit by "wave after wave" of hombers, inflicting "casualties" on a number of the captured Amer-

Defense Secretary Melvin Laird reached back once again to the public cover story for last May's raid. He, too, said nothing about the landing team and spoke only of "limited duration protective reaction air strikes against missiles and anti-aircraft gun sites and related facilities" in southern

of the understanding about tinarmed reconnaissance flights but subtly added a new justification for attack, Another day produced indications that the American raid had been even larger than the one in May and the supply depots had been the principal targets. The loss of a reconnaissance plane on Nov. 13, it appeared was the pretext for an operation quite different from the usual protective reaction. Officials in Washington cited a disturbing increase the infiltration of North Vietnamese men and supplies into South Vietnam and a cocky massing of barely camouflaged supplies north of the DMZ. Hanol kept charging casualties far to the north, near its capital tiowever and the Pents-gon could not satisfy reporters suspicions. Sensing a new "credibility problem," Mr. Laird hurriedly, persuaded the White House Monday to let him publish a sparse account of the Son Tay raid.

The administration had decided, he said, after recognizing North Vietnam's refusal to bargain soon for the release of prisoners or even provide satisfactory news about them, after hearing accounts of their despair and mistreatment, and more recently of the death of six or more and after weighing the risks of the operation itself and possible retaliation against other prisoners, that a bold strike was justified and full of

Reaction

The reaction in Congress and elsewhere, even among the reg-ular critics of thes President's war policies, dealf separately with the bombings and the commando raid. Defenders of the President took the offensive, virtually daring the critics to speak against the high moral purpose or valor of the landing team.

The critics, led by Senators J. W. Fulbright and Edmund Muskie, were thus compelled to pay repeated tribute to the courage and skill of the commandos. But they expressed grave misgivings about the adequacy of American intelligence, about the risks incurred for other prisoners even if the raid had been successful, and about the chances, in Mr. Muskie's words, that the administration was "embarking upon a military course that can escalate the whole war." Worried Americans Keep an Eye on the Spreading Shadow of Hard Time

By A. H. Raskin

NEW YORK, (NYT).—Here the cost of a Thanksgiving dinner for a family of four (turkey but no stuffing) was pegged at $4.73, up 6.5 percent over 1969.

 In Wichita, Kans., unemployment soared to 10.3 percent, and Herbert Osborne, 40, a security guard out of work 18 months, told a reporter: "You can't buy a job in this town." ● In Seattle, Wash, a downtown retailer declared: "We have prohably seen the end of the $150 man's suit in Seattle for the foreseeable future. Now we see sales of one suit for $89 and a second suit at half price." The national economy rounded the Thanksgiving milepost into the Christmas homestreich last week, and for millions of Americans the holiday prospects were grim. While economists and politicians struggled for ways to describe and control spiralling prices and unemployment, families in dozens of communities across the country found a simple phrase that summed up their predicament.

They called it: Hard Times. The reports last week from Washington shed little light. The Nixon administration, still hoping to revive business and cut unemployment without reigniting the infletionary bonfire, took some cheer from a slight dip in wholesale prices and a modest upturn in several key indicators of economic activity.

The Spiral

But these hopeful signs were more than offset by another sharp rise in consumer prices-and by fresh evidence that the wage-price spiral was still soaring with no counterbalancing gains in industrial productivity. Railroad labor, which had already spurned the three-year pay increase of 37 percent recommended by a presidential panel last week refused to accept work-rules changes to end featherbedding that would offset the wage increases. The new development increased the danger of a national rail strike Dec. 11. A New York Times survey last week indicated that the effects of the uncertain economy varied from state to state. There were some areas such as much of the South and Midwest, where there was bardly a sign of Hard Times. Elsewhere, notably in such cities as Boston and Los Angeles, layoffs in the aerospace and electronics industries have brought despair. Virtually everywhere, though, families faced by rising prices were pulling in their belts. Some of the survey findings:

Styles of living differ, but the complaint is the same: The dollar buys less. At a roadside restaurant in Alabama, an Atlanta woman refused to leave a tip when her check for toast and coffee came to 42 cents. Last time, it had been a quarter. A New York gourmet, not known to blanch at the steepest of charges for fine cooking, has been finding prices more haut than the cuisine. "I go to more and more places where the old prices have been pasted over and higher prices written in," he grumbled New York restaurant prices have jumped 9 percent in Housewives were openly scornful of governmental reports that the most basic item in the family budget, food prices, had edged down a trifle last month. From coast to coast they insisted that they got just the opposite impression as they watched the cash register dials spin at supermarket checkout counters.

"Yams that used to be 25 cents a can every Thanksgiving and Christmas since I can remember are now 29 cents." said Mrs. E. McDonald, a Houston housewife. She says a year ago she was paying 25 cents a loaf for bread that now sells for 35 cents and 69 cents for a jar of coffee that sold a year ago for 53 cents.

The argument, however, seems certain to end shortly. The government's own experts acknowledge that food prices will be heading up again next spring as supplies of pork and poultry dwindle and the effects of last summer's corn blight push up

All the other items that go into the Consumer Price Index, from apparel to medical services, rose in October. The overall increase came to one-half of 1 percent for the second month in a row, a rate not much below last winter's peak. The last year has brought a national rise of 5.9 percent in consumer prices. For New York City the rise has been 7.5 percent. The October softening in wholesale prices would normally point the way for retail trends, keeping alive some hope that the crest of inflation might indeed be passing. But all such dreams faded in the face of union announcements that record wage settlements would be sought in 1971 contract negotiations in steel, aluminum, can and other major industries. Across the country, one worker in every 18 is unemployed. When the Nixon administration came into office, the ratio was roughly 1 in every 30. That difference has spelled Hard Times for many thousands. In Florida, cutbacks in the Cape Kennedy space program and anciliary industries have left many engineers jobless—bur-dened by house mortgages in a state far from other job opportunities that pay comparable salaries in their profession. In Los Angeles, another center of the depressed aerospace industry, a utility company with four openings for meter readers found itself besieged by 200 applicants. And in California's affluent Orange County, welfare officials told of "a new kind of applicant": The middle-class man with a long history of steady employment. Relief payments to families with jobless fathers have tripled in the last year.

The special tragedy in the Boston area is the intense concentration of physicists, engineers, and other highly trained specialists now without work or hope. Ralph Saviano, iaid off from an $18,000-a-year post as an aerothermal engineer, offered. to accept a job at half that pay. "They wouldn't take me," he says. "They were suspicious of my willingness to take such a cut and were afraid that if my own field opened up again

One who escaped a similar plight was Walter Liessner, whose $17,500 job as a space engineer disappeared not long after the first men landed on the moon. With the help of relatives, he bought a small general store in Acton, Mass., which he keeps open seven days a week. His wife bakes bread and ples to sell in the store, and Mr. Liessner uses his slide rule to compute what prices he should charge.

In the upper Midwest, defense cutbacks and the effects of the 67-day General Motors strike created pockets of unemployment. There were extensive layoffs in the Minneapolis St. Paul. area among white-collar workers in the computer and electronics industry; manufacturing slowdowns brought unemployment to southeast Wisconsin theast wisconsin. In the Seattle metropolitan area, which includes neighboring Tacoma and Everett, unemployment is estimated at from 10 to 13.5 percent—the result, primarily, of the loss o jobs in the past 28 months at the Boeing Company.

In New York City, where one-seventh of the popul on welfare, the unemployment rolls were raised by hig additions from the worlds of Wall Street and Madison The advent of Christmas always brings euphoric i from department stores and all the rest of Santa's This year, however, retailers in many parts of the nation ledge that customers are husbanding their funds and i on "great values" The expectation is that dollar vol most cities will run shead of last year, but not enough to compensate for the shrinkage in the dollar's purchasing In Chicago a telephone poll taken by the Continental

National Bank among 400 householders indicated that 75 plan to spend less for Christmas this year than they did In Rapid City. S.D., a half-dozen storekeepers reports business was "pretty good," but a Kansas City clothing saler had an opposite report: "Things are pretty ba orders just aren't coming in like they used to. The airl backs and strikes have hurt."

'Take It Easy'

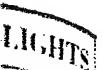

"People who ate out twice a week are now only o once," said a Detroit restaurateur, "and the guys on accounts have been told to take it easy."

Today, emerging from long preoccupation with internal developments, Peking is actively mending its relations and as-serting its influence abroad with considerable finesse.

Ambassadors have been sent back to 28 of the 40 missions from which mission chiefs were recalled in 1967 and 1968 to take part in the Cultural Revolution. New ground has been broken recently by establishing diplo-matic relations with Canada. Italy and Guinea.

There have also been strong indications that diplomatic rela-tions with a number of other countries, including Chile, Belgium and Austria, are imminent. In the United Nations General Assembly, for the first time since the assembly faced the question 21 years ago, Communist China gained e majority this year. It was not enough to expel Tafwan and seat Peking because the issue was declared an important matter, requiring a two-thirds vote.

Long-Range

But Peking has not only shown a real interest in joining the UN but has also entered into several long-range aid programs, signed a number of new trade, agreements, sent trade missions to Europe and received a stream of important visitors. President Agha Mohammad Yahya Khan of Pakistan was recently given one of the biggest welcomes ever accorded a chief of state.

Perhaps the most significant indication of the flexible diplomatic posture was the message of greetings sent to the Presi-dium of the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers on the 53d anniversary of the Russian Revolution. The me expressed a desire for friendly and good-neighborly normal state relations" with the Soviet Union and a willingness to settle outstanding issues.

The chief Chinese target now is the United States, whose policy of nonrecognition of Communist China is being rejected by more and more of its allies. The great issue blocking an improvement in American-Chinese relations is Taiwan, held by the Chinese Nationalists. The United States recognizes the Nationalist government as the legal government of China and is committed to the island's

The average factory worker, after toiling long hours, earns the equivalent of $16.20 a month, barely enough to sup-port a family of two or three. Peasant families have an income of about $100 a year.

A slight improvement in livstandards has been reported because of increased harvests—they have been good for the ninth year in a row-but, with a population of 750 million increasing by ten million annually, most of the new production is absorbed.

Industrial output is expected to show gams. New construction is seen in the cities, oil supplies seem adequate, manusactured goods and ordinary commodities seem to be in better supply, and railways and shipping are operating at capa-

The constant call to "prepare for war" reflects the concern of Chineses leaders over the possibility that China may become enbroiled with one of its two main enemies-"U.S. Imperial-Ism" and "Soviet social-imperialism." However, the Chinese believe, as Chairman Mao put it, that "revolution is the main trend in the world today" although the danger of a new world war still exists.

While mending relations with the Russians and other Communist countries. Peking has made it clear that there will be no relaxation of its ideological vigilance. It continues to encourage splinter pro-Peking parties around the world, including Eastern Europe.

In addition, China gives strong support to the Communist-led forces in Indochina, epplauds the violent tectics of the Palestinians and lends its support to Communist revolts against the governments of Thailand, Malaysia, Burma, Indonesia and India.

Although the Chinese give substantial material aid to revolutionary movements, their influence cannot be measured solely by the amount of aid. To a large extent they have captured the imagination of militant movements around the world, not only in the Middle East and Southeast Asia but in the United States as well. On the domestic front, the draft of a new constitution, made public by Nationalist intelligence sources, defines China as a "socialist state." The present constitution, adopted in 1954, describes China as a "people's democratic state," that is, one that has not yet reached

The swings in policy in the last four years, and the attendant purges, have thinned the ranks. The new trend toward institutionalization and stability has worked inexorably against the radical left, identified particularly with Mr. Mao's wife, Chiang thing his long-time associste Chen Po-ta, and Kang Sheng, a member of the party's Politburo.

More and more of the radical leaders have disappeared from their posts. One of chairman Mao's reasons for launching the Cultural Revolution was to train and develop revolutionary successors who would continue his policies. One dilemma he faced was how to develop a generation that would be dedicated to his goals and to insure that they would not turn into bureaucrets or "revisionists" mindful of material comforts.

What Mr. Mao is trying to do is to create a new man, cne who is selfless, disciplined, doggedly industrious and willing to live and dle without thought of personal ambition. To a large extent the future of China depends oo how well he succeeds in reforming human

Col. Marsh, who has a doctorate in social work, said inpatient rehabilitation was gear-ed to modifying the addict's behavior patterns by association with rewards. They earn a prescribed number of points for everything constructive they do, from making their beds in the Explaining the reasoning behind such a program, Col. Marsh said: "We've found these people to be basically manipulative types. They've had to steal and deal to get drugs. They have histories of being in trouble and trying to get out of it. So we decided against the traditional psychiatric approaches, as being too subjective. With the point system, which is clear and objective, we're trying to get the boys to conform to some type of norm where they can easily see the costs and benefits of their behavior. Hopefully, it oriented when they get out of here."

Another part of the treatment is the "shooting gallery" at the end of the hall. Twice a week, the participants can file into the 10-by-12-foot room for what they call a "shoot-out." It is voluntary, though they are encouraged to take part through the awarding of a large point

A record player fills the room with a din of acid-rock music. Lights change from red to green and back to red, back to green. A medic passes syringes and needles to the soldiers sitting on the mattresses laid out on the floor.

Most of the syringes are filled with a mild narcotic mixed with a compound that induces nansea. One or two are filled only with a harmless saline solution. The participants are not told who will get what, thereby in-creasing the level of anxiety that is desired. Those who inject the narcotic get a "quick high" for a few minntes, then get sick and vomit into the plastic bags they are given. Those who get the harmless injection must watch their wretching companions.

"We hope they will begin to associate drugs with anxiety and sickness," Col. Marsh said.

By Stephen Klaidman WASHINGTON (WP).—Of all the government agencies inherited by the Nixon administration, the one most deeply inliberal democracy was the Peaca Corps, an effort to spread selfhelp among developing coun-

It was created during the Kennedy administration in 1961 and grew with youthful earnestoess under its first director. Sargent: Shriver. But by the mid-1960s - it began to show signs of diminished vigor, President Nixon's choice to run the agency, Joseph H. Biatchford, did not take over a glowingly bealthy organization.

In 1966 there were 42,000 Americans who applied for duty with the Peace Corps. This year the figure is down to 19,000. The early recruits tended to be young and eager to work with foreign populations, but the early corpsmen often lack-ed practical skills. Today there is an emphasis on older recruits with trade skills, but the new recruits are often unable to establish good relations with the foreign population.

As applications were steadily decreasing after the peak year of 1966, attrition was steadily rising. But there is nothing to indicate more volunteers will be recruited or that fewer volunteers will resign in mid-assign-

Force of 6,000

According to Bill Inglis, head of the Office of Volunteer Placement, the Peace Corps is now thinking in terms of 6,000 volunteers a year—compared to the 8,200 volunteers now serving in 61 countries.

But the numbers are only part of a complex mosaic involving the mood of America, the way developing nations view this country, the characters of administrations and the personalities and leadership qualities of individuals.

Mr. Blatchford has been trying to put his mark on the Peace Corps. He has done this, it is widely agreed in the agency's Washington offices, by trying to breathe some new life into old ideas. The watchword under Mr.

Blatchford is "professionalism," and perhaps the most important of his "new direction" ideas is to increase the number of volunteers—which frequently implies older, married and mortgage-bound people.

Both Mr. Shriver and his immediate successor, Jack Hood Vaughn, also sought to increase the percentage of volunteers with experience in the professions and blue collar trades, and both failed. In an article titled ."The Peace Corps: Now We Are 7," which eppeared in the Saturday Review of Jan. 6, 1968, Mr. "Liberal arts graduates have "Volunteers now look at the Peace Corps always made up a large percentage of our volunteers, but in the early days we always had hopes of finding more applicants with technical skills. Mr. Blatchford's answer to those who say be can't attract skilled tradesmen and profes-sionals is twofold. First, he argues, "today's

They don't stay in a job for 30 years. They move. They go. They want new borizons."
The second point is, once again, professionalism: modern recruiting and marketing tech-niques. Jack Porter, the public affairs director, comes from the New York edvertising agency Ogilvie Mather; the advertising director from Wells, Rich & Green, another New York agency; and the recruiting chief from the Irving Trust Co.

Many of the 178 full-time and part-time recruiters have been picked for their ability to "talk agriculture, or talk machine tools, or talk math." Print advertising campaigns have been geared almost exclusively to the blue collar and professional markets.

Although changes in classification cloud the calculations. it sppears that the result so far has been a slight increase in skilled or professional volunteers and a sharp decrease in liberal arts volunteers. At all levels in the Peace Corps, there is serious doubt that Mr. Blatchford's new recruiting approach will succeed. One high-ranking official suggested, in fact, that the next advertising campaign would again be aimed at the traditional backbone of the corps, the liberal arts graduate.

Even recruiters agree that the emphasis on skills has turned off a large number of potential liberal arts applicants.

Today's youth, it is acknowledged by most Peace Corps staff members, is more interested in the problems at I ones overseas. C. Payne Lucas head of the Office of Returned Volunteers and a veteran of the Shriver and Vaughn directorships, puts it this way:

'Difficult Place'

They know that the most difficult place to survive is America.'

Another question frequently asked at Peace Corps headquarters is whether the Blatchford emphasis on skills will substantially eliminate the Peace Corps's intended effect of re-turning sensitive, aware youth to American life.

It has been suggested that Mr. Blatchford has used the "new directions" as an excuse to purge political activists from the corps and replace them with political technicians. If that is true, the Peace Corps may not achieve the prophecy set for it by Mr. Vaughn on its seventh birthday in 1968.

Mr. Vaughn said: "If Congress continues to fund the program, if the American public continues to support us by providing its very best citizens and if we can conlinue to improve the sensitivity end focus of our programs, I think that by 1980 wa will have replaced the Ivy League as the provider of the most ambassadors and the most senior government officials."

Spreading Arab Unity

The accession of Syria to the projected federation which was set on foot by Egypt, the Sudan and Libya is the result—if, indeed, it was not the cause—of the recent power shift in Damascus, And if it provides a reminder of the unhappy squabbles which followed the Syrian-Egyptian rapprochement in the United Arab Republic, that may serve as a warning as well as a practical guide for the new erouping.

Syria has been separated from Egypt hy both political and geographical barriers, to say nothing of the old idea of a greater Syria which has haunted policy in Damascus since the breakup of the Ottoman Empire in World War I. It is far more complex in culture and economy than either the Sudan or Libya, which represents a problem when the relations with the equally complex Egypt are concerned. Something less ambitious than the original U.A.R., therefore, seems called for-especially now that there is no such dominant figure in the Arab world as Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Nevertbeless, from the standpoint of the Arab countries, the new federation offers hope. It has been noted that the Palestinian guerrillas are less than cheerful about their prospects should the federation take form.

They have, quite successfully, played off one Arab nation against another, and developed commanding strength in several. Whether for war or peace, they will lose much of their present influence if their hosts develop a common policy and common agencies for

This does not necessarily mean peace for the Middle East. The new federation may feel it is stronger for war, and simply use the guerrillas for military purposes. But in terms of Arah national stability, the federation promises far more for the region than the weak and feuding coalition that presently exists.

And should the federation pursue a policy of negotiation, the chances for making the results of negotiation stick are far better than when any group of intransigents could drag the whole Arab world into conflict. Similarly, if peace should come, the economies of a federation will, as the European Common Market has demonstrated, be stronger than the old congeries of competing nationalisms. This could well mean that increased prosperity, that unified development, of the Middle East which might remove the popular discontents, with their perennial incitements to domestic strife and foreign conflict.

A Matter of Credibility

Secretary of Defense Laird says the administration decided to publicize the commando raid on an empty prisoner-of-war camp near Hanol because of "a certain problem of credibility in our society." But nearly everything connected with this brilliantly executed but nonetheless abortive missionespecially the official explanations and claims for it-is likely to widen that homefront credibility gap.

Mr. Laird does violence to credibility, for example, when he persists in asserting that intelligence for the raid was "excellent in all respects." It was excellent in all respects except the one for which the mission was undertaken: there were no American prisoners at Son Tay, Even Vice-President Agnew said the mission "obviously" was unsuccessful "because of faulty intelligence."

Nor can the well-deserved praise for the brave men who carried it out obscure the probability that the Son Tay raid will mean even harsher treatment and stricter surveillance for all American prisoners in Indochina. Even if the raid had been a success. the rescue of 70 or more Americans believed to have been at Son Tay would have had to he weighed against the likely consequences for an estimated 300 held in other prisons of North Vietnam.

The credibility problem goes well beyond the Son Tay raid, however, to the related issue of the resumption of American bombing of North Vietnam and the overall policy of Vietnamization and "winding down" the war. Mr. Laird says the decision to disclose the Son Tay raid was made "to explain what we did in the North" and to refute North Vietnamese charges of heavy American bombing of the Hanoi-Haiphong area.

Hanoi donbtless exaggerated; yet Assistant Secretary of Defense Daniel Henkin has now admitted that in diversionary attacks during the helicopter raid on the prison, American planes bombed and strafed enemy instaliations in the Son Tay area only 23 miles west of Hanol Mr. Laird had said nothing about air-to-ground attacks; he had mentioned only that American Navy planes had dropped diversionary flares along the coast.

This was hardly the way to refurbish the administration's credibility at home or ahroad. About all the world is likely to note is that the United States has again carried the air war close to North Vietnam's capital, as Hanol had charged and as Washington in effect had denied. When coupled with the resumption of extensive American bombing of enemy installations and stockpiles south of the 19th Parallel, the Son Tay episode is bound to rekindle old doubts about Mr. Nixon's intentions.

Can the President's idea of Vietnamization include a stepped-up employment of disbelief all week, but wbatever. American air power against the North to the number, it is probably the compensate for the withdrawal of ground worst human disaster since the Indonesian massacres or even since troops? Can he still entertain the notion the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, that another flexing of American military and somehow it gets beyond our muscle will make Hanoi and the Viet Cong grasp. more reasonable in negotiations about both peace and prisoners? These old questions sensitive to human suffering. Dehave taken on fresh urgency. In the cir- spite all the agonies of the modern cumstances it is difficult to credit the assurances of Secretary of State Rogers that respect for individual life and neither Son Tay nor the resumption of the tress and more of a sense of social bombing will affect the Paris peace talks justice today than ever before. Hickel's Ouster

It was as certain as anything can be in politics that Mr. Nixon was going to jettison his Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Walter Hickel. It was simply a matter of how and when, Mr. Hickel has now paid the price of his outspokenness. The pity is not simply that Mr. Hickel looked like a promising Secretary of the Interior but that the discontents which he tried to bring into the light of day and to remedy are still festering. The youth of America is in revolt in many places, and the hostility of the older generation is deepening. Mr. Nixon is dispensing with the services of one of the very few men in public office who might have helped communication between the two sides.

PARIS.—Yesterday the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic calebrated the 50th anniversary of its creation out of the ashes of Ottoman Turkey and the fire of the Bolshevik Revolution. Even if they have not found freedom and independence, the Armenians at least secured a haven safe from orga-nized pillage and racial genocide. The Armenians were the Jews of World War I. Their implacable enemies, the Turks, had begun to mas-sacre them systematically in 1895 under Sultan Abdul Hamid II, but the greatest single disaster they incurred came in 1915. The Turks, then fearing collaboration between this Christian minority and the Russian Army of the Cancasus, decided to deport the entire population of their Armenian province to distant Syrie and Mesopotamia.

Approximately 1.75-million people were removed under barbaric circumstances. Some 600,000 died or were alaughtered en route. For Armenians this terrible event was the equivalent of Dachau, Auschwitz and Beisen for the Jews of World War II.

Like the Poles, Kurds and other frontier peoples, the Armenians chose a bad place to settle. Few foreigners remember how ancient a nation they represent. Armenia is the oldest Christian state (since A.D. 300), and its roots stretch backward into remotest time.

Yet, with all their balents culture and intelligence, they suffered continual depredations from imperial armies that surrounded them. The Romans and Parthians regarded them as alternately a buffer state or a battlefield. The Byrantine Empire and Persia inherited this cynical habit, which, eventually, was handed on to the Turks and the Russians

A King's Death

The last king of independent Armenia died an exile in Paris in 1393, and the freedom of God's oldest Christian citadel was extinguished. Considering this, it is remarkable that, again like the Jews, the Armenians managed to preserve an enduring vitality and consciousness of their own. Following World War I, the victorious Allies, responding to pangs of conscience similar to those that helped to create Israel as a Jewish haven after World War II, sponsored formation of a single Armenian state uniting provinces from Ottoman Turkey and a Russia then

Favorable Climate for Investment Producing Large Inflow of Capital

BRUSSELS. - One reliable measure of the climate for investment in any country is the rate at which a substantial inflow of private capital from affluent and important foreign countries and financial centers is being sustained or increased.

Like other officials of diplomatic missions and financial experts, he dismissed the ageold language problem between the French-speaking Walloons and the Dutch-speaking Flemings as being something of little long-term importance. "This is stupid," he said, "but it will linger on for years. The main thing to remember is that Belgians are businessmen first and foremost, and that politics and languages take second place."

He also stressed that West Germany's investments in Belgium were increasing very quickly, whereas Switzerland, formerly favored as a center for foreign companies in Europe, was rapidly losing ground as a result of recent nationalistic legislation to restrict the activities of foreign businesses and individuals.

Political, diplomatic and financial sources here generally accept the Belgian claims, however, and there is widespread confidence that the entry of Britain, Eire, Norway and Denmark into the Common Market would enhance, rather than damage, Belgium's claims.

The statistics produced by the Banque Nationale de Belgique concerning capital movements and balance of payments link Belgium and Luxembourg together as one unit beclosely entangled under the Belgium-Luxembourg Economic Union (BLEU). But Belgium's tiny partner in this union is the smallest member of the Common Market, and the figures can be regarded generally as being predominantly rep-resentative of Belgium.

The remaining four partners of "the Six"—France, West Germany, Italy and Holland-currently constitute the largest single unit responsible for the growing inflow of private capital into Belgium. The United States is the second largest During 1969 the total gross inflow of private capital from France, Germany, Italy and Holland amounted to 12.3 billion Belgian francs ($246 million) compared with 7.1 billion during 1968.

While the growth in capital movement in this direction conforms with the trend, a significant portion of the sharp upsurge between 1968 and 1969 was provoked, according to informed banking sources here, by speculation prior to the devaluation of the French franc.

At that time French investments in Belgium—particularly in property—soared, and a great deal of Belgian money in France was repatriated.

Marked Difference

There is a marked difference in the source of the capital inflow between 1968 and 1969. The 1968 total consisted of 1.4 billion Belgian francs in the form of assets and profits repatriated to Belgium from Germany, Holland, Italy and France and 5.9 billion Belgian frances in the form of invo . ments, whereas the 1969 total patriation and investment of 9.2 hillion.

The United States followed fairly closely behind Belgium's Common Market partners. During 1969 the total gross inflow of private capital from the United States was 10.6 17lion Belgian francs ($212 million) compared with 8.5 hillion the previous year.
In this case the 1969 total included a repatriation figure of 7.6 billion francs to Belgium and an inflow of 3 billion france in the form of new U.S. capital, against the comparative 1963 figures of 3.3 billion Belgian francs and 5.5 billion respectively.

This switch in the source of the capital inflow-the upsurge in the repatriation of money from the United States to Belgium and the drop in the flow of new U.S. capital into Belgium-has been attributed largely to the increasingly depressed U.S. financial situation and restrictions imposed on direct capital invenent which resulted from the U.S. balanceof-payments problem.

Switch in Source

The total gross inflow of 34.2 billion Belgian francs in private capital from abroad in 1969 must be viewed against the total gross outflow in the same category which amounted to 30.4 billion Belgian francs to all countries, compared with 26.7 hillion in 1968.

In terms of proportion, the outflow of capital during both 1968 and 1969 went primarily to the United States and secondly to Belgium's Common Market (Continued on Page 15, Col. 1)

$240 Million World Trade Center

BRUSSELS.—A large area of D central Brussels contrasts sharply with the rest of the bustling, prosperous city around it. It is a desolate suburb of quiet streets, gaping, empty shop windows and neglected buildings, sadly in need of repair and a few coats of paint.

These sad buildings are doomed. They will never see a coatof paint again. And they are growing in number as more and more people daily quit their houses, shops and living ac-commodations upstairs.

The darkened buildings and the dead pavements reflect little or nothing of the lively crowds which jostie the main streets of Brussels, with its neon-lighted bars, shops and restaurants, the shopping arcades which are so popular in Belgium, and the towering new blocks of offices

Destined for Demolition This area is destined for demolition. And the city planners intend to build a whole new "city within a city" called the "Manhattan Suburb" on the 53-hectare (135 acres) site which will be available when the hulldozers have fistiened the area. Already, millions of france have been paid out in compensation to people who have quit properties. With the compensation price for some properties still under negotiation, and the cost of construction and building labor uncertain over the next decade, the total cost of this vast project . is still a matter for conjecture. However, it is estimated that it will cost something in the region of $1.5 billion.

A key factor in the whole development scheme is the World Trade Center, by itself a huge project which will cost about 12 billion Belgian francs (about $240 million), and which is already under construction within the proposed "Manhattan Suburh" development area.

Following in the footsteps of world trade centers already existing or being built in New York, Tokyo, Rotterdam, Sydney and elsewhere, the Brussels cen-

From a Vision to a Reality

BRUSSELS The concept of building world trade centers in Brusseis, the Belgian capital, and the pert of Antwerp, Belgium's second city, fits in well with the country's bid to become the leading center for international and business affairs in Western Europe.

The idea for siting a World Trade Center in Brussels was the brainchild of Mr. Charles De Pauw, a man who has done much to transform the face of central Brussels in recent years. While there has been criticism of the decision to build two trade centers within 35 miles of each other, the organizers are confident that the importance of Antwerp as a port, with its buge concentration of industrial plants, will justify the dual center project.

The project saems to have captured the imagination and support of Belgium's government, municipal and business leaders, from Premier Gaston Evskens downwards, from the

In 1958 Mr. De Pauw's group undertook construction of a number of major buildings.

These included the glant G.P.O. and City Administrative Building, which cost 2.3 billion Belgian francs, and the huge Philips Building, an investment of 1.3 billion Belgian francs, both of which now tower above the His consortium also built a

In 1968 he set the wheels in motion for the construction of the Brussels World Trade Center. The consortium which he heads now has a registered capital of 600 million Belgian francs, and holds interests in 27 other substantial companies. And, after setting the pace in the field of building construction in Belgium, the group is now establishing itself in other European countries.

Mr. De Pauw wears lightly he responsibility of undertaking the vast Belgian world trade center projects. After explaining the Brussels Trade Center project in detail, with the ald of an impressive scale model, he said with absolute con-fidence: We have no doubts this trade center will be suc-

(Centinged from Page 9) tion, and the proposed private helicopter pads within the complex, great attention has been paid to direct access to the Center Firstly, the platform from which the eight towers will rise will straddle the major arterial highway which rups through the center of Brussels, and which will slice through the middle of the eight towers.

Thus, road traffic from outside Brussels will have a highspeed, multilane highway leading straight into the heart of the city and into the middle of the World Trade Center, where they will find underground parking to accommodate at least 5,000 cars right under the whole trade center complex.

One side of the platform will be connected directly with the capital's Gare du Nord, and thus by train to other major centers Europe. Special trains from this station will also convey visitors to and from the capital's international airport.

An airways terminal will also be housed in this complex, and negotiations now under way are likely to result in a heliport on the reof of the main platform to connect visitors directly with Brussels Airport.

The Center will eventually employ 25,000 people, and is intended to accommodate about 50,000 people daily. The concept, as in the case of other world trade centers under construction, is to concentrate people and organizations con-ormed with international trade, business and finance in one place where they can meet and transact their business with the minimum amount of difficulty. One key factor of the Center will be the information center which will house the latest communications equipment needed to provide continuous, up-tothe minute information from other major world business and financial centers. As one official of the Brussels World Trade Center put it: "We plan to provide a center with such facilities that no major trading organization or country will be able to afford not to have an office in it." The platform will house a prestige shopping center, a convention hall to seat 3,000 people, and display showrooms for permanent or temporary trade exhibitions, with a total area of 200,000 square meters.

Underground showroom service facilities and the parking vaults for some 5,000 vehicles will bring the floor level of the entire trade center to a total of some 750,000 square meters.

Many embassies, and most of those with significant commercial departments, are expected to take office space in the trade center complex. Major Belgian banks and export-import concerns, and foreign banks and companies with offices, plants or trading interests either in Belgium or Europe are likely to follow suit, officials say, Construction work has start-ed already on the first two towers, and the accommodation in these two buildings has been booked in advance.

hooked in advance.

An advance commitment on apace is a key factor in the progress of the entire scheme.

Officials of the private consortium behind the trade center are confident, and the fact that it is being built as a part of the "Manhattan Suburb" lends weight to their optimism.

The "Manhattan Suburb" as a whole is a public sector project, but the two are interdependent. The new suburb will include two new hotels with a total of 1,700 rooms, together with blocks of apartments to suit the wide range of diplomata executives and officials who are expected to work at the World Trada Center, Naturally, there are critics of the choice of Brussels as the site for such a project. Some say it should have been concentrat-ed in Antwerp, Belgium's second oity and one of the world's largest perts, some 35 miles to the porth.

But officials say all three will work in close co-operation, just as they will co-operate with other world trade cepters, and the prevailing enthusiasm of business-minded Belgians seems to rule ont anything other than a concerted effort to succeed.

A Giant Port Gro From a River Gicilli

ANTWERP Mest rivers are associated with legenda about water spirits and clama and in this respect. Belgium's River Scheldt is no different from the Rhine and the Volgal The citizens of Antworp, who

The citizens of Aniworp, who owe the prestige and prosperity of their city-peri down through the ages to the River Scheldt, have a legend about a giant known as Antigonus.

The authorities of the city treat the legend with a gentle humor, and at the same time with a sinches that indicates that it has traces of fact.

While there have been many while there have been many powerful masters of the River Geheld, legend has it that one of the strongest—pessibly one feared and hated more than others for his formidable strength and cruelty—was the "Chapt Anticopus"

"Clant Antigorus."

As the legend puts it: "Ones upon a lime there lived a glant in the castle of Antwerp who demanded a tell from those who salled man. "And the words: "This is the castle where used to live the giant Anti-gonus, which were inscribed there in 1516 can still be seen. That particular chapter of Astworp's history appears to have come to a happy ending with the arrival on the scene of a Roman hero and warrior. Silvius Brabo, who defeated Antigonus in battle and, ac-cording to the legand, cut off the giant's hand and threw it into the River Schelds. This act of "hand-throwing"

is the most popular explana-tion in terms of etymology, for the origin of the name Antwerp, or Antwerpen, as it is known in Dutch: "hand" means the and , "werpen" means same in Dutch as in English,

Naturally, there are other versions; some say that the name given to the city by the first settlement was "sen de werpen," meaning "at the wharfs," which also has a ring of truth about it. The present dock system consists of some 30 docks which are connected with the river by four sea locks.

World's Largest Lock The Zandvijet Lock, which was completed under the last was completed under the last 10-year development plan, is the pride of Antwerp port authorities. It is the largest in the world, with a length of 1,539 feet, a width of 187 feet, and a depth of 60 feet at average high tide.

Modern radar equipment makes the Zandvilet Lock accessible under all weather conditions, and it has increased the lecking capacity of the port the locking capacity of the port by shout 75 percent, which, in turn has led to the port's reputation of being the port with the fastest turn-around in the world, particularly in the field of container ships.

The Exploitation Of Technology

A NTWERP.—The strange, crab-like vehicle lumbered along the quay, gently deposit-ed its sealed, 40-foot container box alongaide others in a neat row, and lumbered away again,

The containers arrived every four or five minutes, delivered by two of these machines.

On the quayside the huge container bridge crace trundled along its raliway lines, one half of its gantry reaching out over the quay, the other towering above the cargo ship berthed

Mechenical fingers came out of the sky, groping for the link holes in the container box and elamped heme securely with a clash of metal.

The box soared high, travelling in three directions at the same time as it lifted, and moved along the overhead tracks of the crane which, lo turn, was moving along the length of the ship. Suddenly, it was neatly stacked on the deck, and the crane moved en to the next

5 Men in Sight

The operation continued un-ceasingly and effortlessly, and there were only five men in sight. Apart from the drivers of the two vehicles delivering the containers to the quay the loading operation required only a foreman on the quay to direct the choica of containers. the transporter bridge driver, perched high above, and tho man directing the crane driver from the deck of the ship. All three were in touch by radio,

This revolutionary system of cargo handling is one example of the modern techniques used at the port of Antwerp. One port official estimated that traditional loading methods would have required at least 18 dockers to accomplish the same amount of work.

Elsewhere in the world, es pecially in Britain, the use of the container method has run into serious trade union opposition because it speeds up the loading and unloading of cargo, and also allows large cuts in the labor ferce.

In Antwerp the port authorities seem to have accomplished the introductico of the centainer system, and other modern methods, with minimum disturbance to the port's activities, and the dock labor force ap-pears to be contented even though the number of dock workers has been cut from 16,-000 to 12,000 over the past five

Soaring Volume

Antwerp is now one of the world's leading container ports. In 1966, 1967 and 1968 its container traffic amounted to 300,-000, 500,000 and 600,000 tons respectively, and last year this soared to 1.2 million tons.

During the first three months of 1970 Antwerp recorded new record figures by handling an average of 17,865 loaded containers per menth during the quarter (9,194 incoming and 8,871 outgoing). The total volume of cargo carried in these containers during the three months amounted to 687,235

The port now has seven of the huge container bridge cranes operating from six spe-clally built terminals.

The LASH System

Another revolutionary system which is already being used at Antwerp is the LASH system which involves great floating metal hoxes each capable of earrylog 350 tons of cargo.

The boxes are loaded as they float at the quayside, and then sealed. Tugs tow them to a special ship which has a crane built into the stern.

The crans lifts the metal boxes to deck level, runs along the deck on tracks and deposits the boxes either in the hold or on the deck. It can load and unload at the same time, and the unleading process consists merely of dumping the metal boxes in the water, where they are promptly towed away by turboats.

Another modern system which being used extensively at Antwerp is the "rell-on, roll-off" method which allows massive trucks to drive up a ramp directly into a ship, and drive off just as quickly when it reaches its destination.

Nation's Communications

Belgium's Trump Card

BRUSSELS.—Communications are one of the trump cards in Belgium's bid for recognition as the focal point of international affairs and business activities in Europe, and they have played an important role in the country's history and development.

The first railway system on the European continent was built in Belgium, and trains helped to establish Belgium as an industrial power second only to Britain during the latter part of the 19th century.

Today the rail network crisscrosses the country and links Brussels with neighboring capitals in France, Luxembourg, West Germany and the Nether-

Belgium has a small but modern merchant marine fleet of about 100 ships with a total registered tonnage of some 800,000 BRT.

In terms of air travel, Brussels International Airport is one of the most central airports in Europe. The country's national atrline, Sabena World Airlines, operates services to more than 100 cities in 38 countries on four continents.

The Role Played by the Brussels Bourse

BRUSSELS.—The Brussels Bourse is a small stock exchange and its activities have tended to decline in recent years. But it still plays an important role in Belgian and international financial affairs, and its members and officials believe that will continue to do so irrespective of the anticipated growth of the European Common Market and the likelihood this was an active, speculative bourse. In recent years business has dropped away. "The market here is generally very quiet because it is now too dependent upon activity on Wall Street, and responds to movements there like most other stock exchanges.

"In my opinion, the Brussels Bourse can go no lower-it can only go up," he said, adding that he was optimistic that it would

Another dealer concerned with arbitrage, which is an important factor in the operations of the bourse here, said: "I am certain. that the situation will improve."

Arbitrage is the process of buying a security in one market and selling it at the same time in another market in order to take advantage of price differences and currencies which are fluctuating, even if only fractionally.

The fact that the movement of currency is not restricted in Belgium gives the bourse here an advantage over other leading financial center.

The depressed market con-ditions on Wall Street during July and August were reflected in normal dealings on the Brussels Bourse, which, at that time, ran at about 60 million Belgian francs ($1.2 million) a day.

Brussels' dealings climbed to the 90 million Belgian francs a day level in September and, as Wall Street gradually recovered, Brussels topped the 140 million Belgian francs a day level which is the estimated level required to keep the Bourse here in .

A Hospitable Home for Foreign Firms

By Norman B. Gilbertson

BRUSSELS.—To the neutral observer, in other words, non-Belgian and non-American, but one who has been close to the Belgian business scene for several years, it seems difficult to find a country in Europe where American business cor-porations "fit in" better than they do in Belgium.

.Unlike their neighbors to the South and East, the Belgians have not reacted unfavorably to the incoming tide of U.S. corporations. Incidents have been isolated and minor, and public opinion as a whole has supported the welcoming policy of its

Such a favorable attitude is, of course, a blend of self-interest and affinity, where wartime nemories, which seem to linger here somewhat more than elsewhere, may also play a role.

The most important factor of all, however, is Belgium's traditional receptivity to foreign trends. The winds that sweep through this flet land seem to bring with them ideas and influences from all directions. This is reflected in the diversity of architectural styles to be found here, which include U.S.type (and sometimes U.S.-design-ed) skyscrapers and American

Changing Skyline

What have been the effects of American business's presence on Belgium? The first and most obvious has been to help dot Brussels with huge office buildings, as indicated above, and this is not to everyone's liking, especially when these are built residential areas. But the Belgians themselves are compulsive builders, and the Brussels skyline, like New York's, is forever changing.

Another development has been the acquisition of several large Beigian enterprises by American firms. The most spectacular of these acquisitions have been but I don't see that happening at this stage," he added. Westinghouse's acquisition of Ateliers de Construction Electrique de Charleroi (ACEC) and J. C. Penney's acquisition of the Sarma-Priba store chain. Neith-er of these moves has aroused much opposition from any quarter, including labor unions, and the modernization of Sarma is not likely to create anything but public satisfaction. Not every Belgian firm wishes to be taken over, however, and at least one large and successful firm appears to have successfully fought off a takeover move by a U.S. glant.

To companies fearing U.S. acquisition or simply U.S. competition, the presence of large American firms has acted as a stimulant. Belgium has long had some very large companies with international ramifications. Some of them, such as Pétrofina and Glaverbel, are showing an increasing aggressiveness and are even invading the U.S. mar-

Management Training

American free traders can only view this development with satisfaction. American protectionists, of course, will not, and Belgians, who are exporters of certain products to the United States, have little love for those Americans. Yet, characteristically, this has not affected the climate for American companies operating in Belgium.

The stimulating effect of American companies has also become apparent in the field of management training. The more advanced methods utilized by U.S. firms, as well as the presence in Brussels of several leading American and European anagement consulting firms has sharpened the interest in new management techniques. It was no accident that the American Management Association chose Brussels as the site of its European branch, Management Center Europe, a successful or-ganization which has generated a number of competitors.

More recently, a trend towards in-company training has also become apparent in large Belgian companies. These developments have, of course, been welcomed by the Belgian executives and cadres, who were probably instrumental in part in bringing them about.

The interest shown by young Eelgians in management training is considerable. In fact, for is our belief that this is their primary motivation in selecting a job. This, together with the opportunity to more up more rapidly, rather than initial salary, seems to be the principal reason why some Belgians migrate to American firms.

One important management trend resulting from the pres-ence of U.S. firms in Belgium has been the training and development of Belgian marketing men. Marketing was conspicuously absent from Belgian busi-Less activities, although Belgians have long been active in foreign trade. But their exports, mostly industrial products and issually of high quality, required little organized effort for many years. Times, of course, have changed and competition has been intensified.

Belgian job-hunters know that they will rise faster and acquire responsibilities younger in U.S. than in Belgian firms, but they also know that job security is greater in the latter. This is why American firms attract young and particularly self-confident types. More traditionally minded graduates, particularly engineers and financial men two areas where Belgium has long been prominent) tend to choose one of the large Belgian industrial firms or banks, frequently for a lifetime career.

It can be said, without too much oversimplification, that the Belgians are a conservative, but not a nationalistic country—

Belgians for international comwhich is a rather rare combination. The average Belgian is strongly attached to his native city and province, where, as soon as his means permit, he builds a private home, And, although he has no objection to travelling, he much prefers to continue living at bome rather than digging up roots. This characteristic, which is not found in countries of similar size with comparable international activities, such as Hol-land or Switzerland, must be kept in mind when recruiting

In Belgium as elsewhere in Europe, bowever, business traditions are slowly changing. The gap between American and European firms is gradually being filled, and this is not merely a one-way proposition. One factor favoring a certain Americanization of Belgian companies is the relatively high proportion of Belgian top managers who have studied at U.S. universities. In-

Some financial experts and economists say that its tradimanagement company structure are rooted in the past, and have prevented it from facing com-petition from huge U.S. and Common Market investors, especially in the new industrial and commercial growth areas.

Certainly, the rates of return on its huge assets have dropped sadly in recent years, par-ticularly as a result of the loss of its wealthy mineral holdings in the former Belgian Congo colony, and the problems which have hit its coal mines and steel mills at home.

Nevertheless, Société Générals still wields great power, and it is recognized in financial circles here that the company has the wealth and the rapge of interests to enable it to overcome these problems.

In one way or another the Société Générale is involved in the operation of banks, insurance companies, shipping firms, coal producers, steel combines, mechanical and electrical industries, non-ferrous minerals and metals firms, real estate construction and cement companies. It is also engaged in textiles, paper, chemicals and nnclear energy, as well as computers and the glass industry.

Several years ago the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development-better known as the World Bankreferred to this company in a study of development banks as "a vital innovation in banking technique.

Founded in 1822 by King William I of the Netherlands "to promote the nation's industry," Société Générale has, from the beginning, been concerned in industrial development and was a credit establishment of a type outside the normal practice of the period.

passed to the newly-created National Bank of Belgium. The Belgian law of 1934 obliged the company to separate its banking from its investment business and put the former in the hands of a new subsidir y. This was the Banque de la Société Générale de Belgique which, since 1965. has been known as Société Générale de Banque, with So-ciété Générale de Belgique as its principal shareholder.

Among the early industrial activities developed by this Belgian holding company were the creation of the colliery companies, the setting up of communications networks, the de-velopment of the steel industry and the generation and use of

From 1906 onwards it was concerned with the industrialization of the Congo and this led it to create a non-ferrous metals industry and to extend its marine transport activities.

In the same period it was taking an active part in the development of the Donetz Basin in Russia, in railway building in the Far East and in urban equipment works in Latin Amer-

Power of Decision

As most of the shareholdings are of a quasi permanent character this makes this Belgian holding company different from an American conglomerate. It takes an active part in the top management of the associated companies, provides them with financial support, puts at their disposal various services and helps them in the execution of mergers and similar rationalization operations.

In spite of their relationship with Societé Générale, they retain the power of decision on their own problems and handle their management and their expansion on an individual basis.

Financial Structure

As of December 31, 1969, the book value of the holding company's assets was nearly 13 7.5 billion francs represents shareholdings in subsidiary and associated companies. The market value of the shareholdings exceeded 17.5 billion francs, indicating an undisclosed reserve of over 10 billion francs ($200

New York to Hong Kong .

Among the company's chief shareholdings are those in the Société Générale de Banque, the largest bank in Belgium which ranks 55th in the Ame-ican Banker list of the world's biggest banks; this bank is one of the main shareholders of the European-American banks established in New York-and has a controlling interest in several banking organizations throughout the world (including France, South America, the Congo and Hong Kong) and Metallurgie Hoboken Overpelt, the large non-ferrous metals undertaking with an annual turnover of over 30 billion francs ($600 million) which is one of the world's biggest copper refiners.

Controlling Interests

It also has holdings in Union Minière, a holding and mining company with assets of nearly 12,5 billion francs ($250 milion) which returned a 1969 profit of about 1.5 billion france ($30 million) and in Traction et Electricité, an engineering company which in 1969 had projects under survey to a total of 45 billion francs ($900 miltion) and which has a staff of almost a thousand engineers and technicians; This company operates in Europe, in the Near East and in Africa. It has a number of shareholdings in several countries covering various branches of industrial activity such as electric; and other power, oil, chemicals, aluminum and building.

Besides this the Societé Générale's portfolio contains other majority or controlling interests such as in C.B.R., the biggest cement producer in the Benelux area, in the three steel companies-Cockerill Arbed (Luxembourg) and Sidmar -which produce between them over 15 million tons of steel or 13 percent of the Common Market's production, in the Compagnie Maritime Belge, the only Belgian marine transport company and parent of the Belgian Line (New York), which is associated in Dart Containerline, and in Global has ferin vices (newly incorporated in New York to build a new container terminal); in North America in Genstar (Montreal) which is active in the different Canadian provinces and also in the Western United States and has assets amounting to nearly

World Markets

The free world's output of goods and services is likely to he dominated in the future by a decreasing number of very large multinational corporations and Société Générale intends that companies in its group will he among them by competing in world markets and investing abroad to a greater extent than before.

It has been said, with considerable truth, that American firms in Europe are more European than most European firms. What was meant, of course, was that they are more Europe-conscious, as they do not suffer from the limitations that a national viewpoint and strong national customs may impose on its business executives, In this, as in other respects, American firms are finding strong support in Belgium, not only from the Belgians themselves, but also from firms, like ours, who have gravitated to Brussels because we are and feel truly European, and because this is the capital for the new Europe,

Antwerp: World's Leader in Cut, Polished Diamonds

A NTWERP.—There is an old saying that "diamonds are a girl's best friend." True as that may be, this precious stone cannot be more popular anywhere than it is in the port of Antwerp, Belgium's second city, and with Finance Ministry officials in Brussels, where a keen watch is maintained on export figures.

While Belgium itself is not a diamond-producing country, Antwerp can justly claim to be the leading world market for cut- and polished diamonds, a position which it has held for

The importance of this industry to the Belgian economy can be judged by the fact that the total turnover of diamonds alimbed to the value of 42 billion Belgian francs ($840 million) in 1968.

This was an increase of some 1967 figure, and more than double the total value of the turnover achieved in 1963. And the figure continues to rise steadily.

The United States holds first place in the line of customers, taking about 35 percent of Belgium's total diamond exports. Britain and the British colony of Hong Kong come second with about 13 percent.

Strange as it may Antwerp buys virtually all its dismonds originally from London, and Britain buys back its requirements after they have been cut and polished by the craftsmen of Antwerp.
The reason for this is that while Antwerp is the home of the finished product-the diamond that goes into your ring -London is the leading world center for rough diamonds—the stones which are basically in the same raw condition in which they are mined,

While diamond cutting and olishing have been a key craft in Belgium for some five centuries, Antwerp has not always held the title of the major

Antwerp vied with Bruges, and also with Amsterdam, another important diamond cen-ter, to dominate this field. Supplies of rough diamonds were relatively plentiful at the e and more and more merchants entered this business

This prosperous industry suffered a setback in the 17th and 18th centuries as a result of various political problems which hit the Belgian economy at the time. But it recovered, and Antwerp gradually strengthened its position as the leading world

Naturally, dealings with the world's most precious stone in-volved abuses, and some governments, such as the Dutch government, imposed tight reters). - The Belgo-Luxembourg Economic Union recorded a balance of payments surplus of 7.3 billion Belgian francs (3146 million) in the third quarter against a surplus of 5.5 billion in the second quarter and a deficit of 6.7 billion in the third quarter of 1969, the Beigian National Bank reported here.

that the regulations concerning the import and export of thousands of diamonds each year are as simple as possible.

London's position as the imiding world center for rough diamonds stems largely from the discovery of vast diamond fields in South Africa which provoked a prespecting rush similar to the California gold rush.

Big buyers moved in and bought up the claims of individual prospectors, and this ultimately led to the virtual world menopoly of rough diamond supplies currently held hy De Beers Consolidated Mines.

Rough diamonds are shipped to London from all over the South Africa-and there the flow onto the market is regustrictly by De Beers through its Diamond Corpora-tion, which has two outletsone for gem stones and one for industrial stones

The world's biggest buyer is Antwerp, where the industry employs some 17,000 people, including 7,000 highly skilled cleavers, sawyers and cutters. Despite the fantastic value of diamonds, the initial purchases on the London market involve a great deal of trust on both

A dealer from Antwerp-or elsewhere—does not simply and pick out the individual diamonds he likes. He must contract to buy a certain unseen selection of stones for a certain sum regularly, and he gets a "package deal."

Sometimes he will feel that he has gained slightly on the selection. Other times he will feel that he has not come off so well.

Four main exchanges-similar to stock markets-handle the sale of diamonds in Antwerp. They are the Diamond Club. which was founded in 1893, the Bourse, the Diamantkring, and the Vrije Diamenthandel

The ample freedom of movement which members of these exchanges and foreign buyers enjoy, the feeling of security which a long-established industry of high reputation inspires, and the fact that all types of diamonds can be treated and purchased here, make Antwerp an ideal center for the buyer in this field. One member of the elite Dismond Club here said that the merchants of Antwerp had never made any effort to take away control of rough diamonds from London. He felt that the fact that the source of rough diamonds and the market for the finished product were in different hands ensured a degree of stability for the valua of a gem which could become virtually valueless overnight if supply was not strictly con-

After the diamonds have been cut and polished they are sold on the market through hrokers, who work on a commission hasis. They are then bought hy local merchants or huyers who come to Antwerp from all over the world.

Finally, they reach the jewellery manufacturer, where they are graded and made up, and hence they appear in a glittering array of rings, hracelets and necklaces in the shop window.

You can huy them quite easily -all you have to do is to strike a diamond field, and the rest is

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, Nov. 29 (NYT). -Some positive steps have been taken recently in Washington to cope with the nation's serious economic problems—and further dramatic actions may be at hand. Businessmen, investors and the public are becoming increasingly restive about continuing inflation, rising unemployment and the lack of sparkle in business activity. It is widely felt—though by no means unanimously-that the new initiatives promptly. Powerful forces already have been launched to revive the economy and to attack the unemployment problem. The federal budget has turned to a marked deficit position and promises to become more stimulative during the next fiscal year as spending, including the outlay for defense, rises. More recently, major reductions have occurred in key interest rates and the Federal Reserve System may have decided on a more expansive monetary policy to aid the economy and bolster both business and public con-

White House effort to achieve voluntary wage and price restraints' through presidential persuasion and the pressure of public opinion.

New impetus for the movement came last week after the Labor Department issued the discouraging report that consumer prices in October had risen at an annual rate of 6 percent for the second successive month, after having held in a range of less than 5 percent during the June-August period. An indication that some new policies may be forthcoming from the administration to deal with cost-push inflation was contained in the statement of Ron Ziegler, the White House press secretary, after the latest consumer price figures were announced.

"We look on that with some concern and with a desire to further intensity our efforts in dealing with it." he said. Mr. Ziegler also said that the next "inflation alert" to be published by the Council of Economic Advisers would be more direct and "tougher" in pinpointing wage and price increases regarded as excessive. Nevertheless, top administra-tion officials have been hewing to the line that the nation is still making some progress in the fight to subdue inflation. They were heartened by the news that wholesale prices

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

When the weaker side does a lot a maneuvering in the bidding the resulting auction can be quite complex. A guide to the labyrinth is needed on the diagramed deal.

South opened one club after three passes, and in most games East-West would have nothing to say from that point. But East and West became extremely active.

When North responded one spade, East bid one no-trump. A player who has passed originally cannot have a hand suitable for a natural no-trump overcall, so the message was clear: East was showing length in the unbid red suits.

South's double was for penalties, showing that he had some high-card strength in reserve, and West was not inclined to choose a red suit. Holding equal length, he bid the opponent's club suit, transmitting the message: "You choose." East-West had no need to go beyond two diamonds when North doubled two clubs, but the partnership reached three diamonds in a spirit of bravado, and landed in three no-trump when North used a cue-bid in his turn. The message of three hearts was: "I have a heart stopper, partner, so you can try no-trump if you stop diamonds."

A low diamond was led, and East's jack was taken by the king. As the play of the jack marked the ten in the South hand, West tried a heart shift when he won the second round of clubs with the king. South put up the ace, and played two more rounds of clubs ending in the dummy.

The diamond queen was led, and when West won with the ace he shifted to a spade. South took East's eight with the ace and cashed his remaining club.

The club leads were embarrassing to East, whose four discards were three diamonds and one heart.

So although South had no further entry to the dummy he could not be prevented from scoring the spade king as his ninth trick. He cashed the diamond king and led a heart, forcing East to play a spade after winning his two heart

ERIK H. ERIKSON The Growth of His Work By Robert Coles. Atlantic-Little, Brown. 440 pp. $

Reviewed by John Leonard

AT one point in this book—which is a popular introduction, an intellectual biography and an act of homage-Robert Coles describes Erik Erikson as a man who first sees, and then responds with written thoughts." Erikson was an artist before he became a psychoanalyst. His seeing isn't done through goggles of dogma, nor does it take place in an armchair in a library. It is a naked sort of seeing, a search for "configura-tions," whether the location is a clinic for children, a submarine, a Sioux or Yurok Indian reservation, Mississippi, Ger-many or Pakistan, It is also a seeing in history anthropology and social relations. The man who gave us the concepts of 'identity" and "moratorium," who wrote "Childhood and Society" and "Young Man Luther" and "Gandhi's Truth." considers public events and institutions more than just "peripheral" factors in a child's development. The artist knows that "foreground" and "background" in a configuration are tricks of perspective which the observer can always perform and the participant often can not.

Erikson was born in 1902 in Germany, of Danish parents who had separated before his birth. When at 3, he fell ill, his mother consulted a Jewish pediatrician in Karlsruhe "who cured the patient and fell in love with the patient's mother." Doctor and mother married. Erikson was raised in Karlsruhe, an indifferent student who skipped college to wander around Europe, dropped out of art school after a year to wander some more, and was finally persuaded by a friend to teach art at an experimental school in Vienna. The school existed for the children of well-to-do parents who had come to Vienna seeking the advice of Sigmund Freud. .Those were the days when analysts were "chosen"; they did not apply. Erikson was drawn into Freud's circle, deemed sympathetic, analyzed by Anna Freud and trained by the Vienna Psychoanalytic Society, which made him a full member upon his graduation. He had no academic degrees of any sort, only a wife—the talented Joan Mowat Erikson, whose new book "Saint Francis and His Four Ladies! is published this week by Norton-two children, a capacity to teach and learn, In 1933, as the situation in Germany deteriorated, Erikson, like Paul Tillich and so many others, emigrated to the United States, where he became Boston's first child analyst. Visits to reservations, years in California, more years in Stock-bridge, Mass., a full professorship at Harvard—biographical details wholly inadequate to express the richness of his intellectual enquiry. His work, with children, Indians, Hitler's "imagery," nerve-shattered v erans and historical drawing on but not ex the researches of othe plines, consistently emr the tension between in and society. His kind of analysis went against th of American practice, w those years was crib-c moralistic and punitive (roks as an "anal" cultur Origin of Species" as a s parricide, etc.). He ti after seeing, to make ! what he saw, and fou sibilities as well as deter in the personality's ment. He refused the a instead such messy i "hope" "trust," tence."

No wonder Robert C mires him. Dr. Cole work with children, e ehetto children, requ psychoanalysis that i process, like life itself, ing of "melodies, sor work and make good some that don't, and are noise or worse," a puntal method, not a Like Freud, Erikson Coles conceive of psycho 'as a major humanistic of the discontinuities our civilization forces children." Baker of an evening for a pint of porter and a clay pipe, but it was a rare night on that lonely and desolate coast when a civilized man ventured upon the road after first fall of dusk.

It was all the more surprising then, when on a gray winter's evening so cheerless that mother and I had closed the bar early, thinking that the most gnarled of sea dogs would surely not be abroad on such a devil's night, we heard a thunderous pounding at the door.

Opening it, not without considerable trepidation, I found myself confronting one of the most distinguished and vet ravaged countenances that had ever stepped across the threshold of the Admiral Benbow. Though gray at the temples and neatly shorn in the manner that left little doubts in my mother's mind or mine that he must at one time have been a rich Republican captain, be wore an expression of such evil fatigus that his visage struck terror even in my adventure-loving small boy's heart, and I would surely have slammed the door on him had be not quickly displayed a dazzling handful of the most eminent credit cards.
